

XI

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ELEMENT

INTRODUCTION

Florida's history has been one of remarkable change: from Henry Flagler's opulent resorts and railroad, to a retirement haven (with the advent of air conditioning), to a technology and tourism rich state grown from the seeds of the space program in Cape Canaveral and Disney. Few states have literally weathered the pressures of change as well as Florida has. As the fourth most populous state in the U.S., Florida's population growth continues to drive new challenges and opportunities to the Sunshine State. The State is now projected to double in population by 2060, growing from roughly 18 million people today to upwards of 36 million in just slightly more than five decades. While the majority of this growth is anticipated to concentrate in the coastal regions of south Florida, and along the I-4 corridor between Orlando and Tampa, constraints relative to the environment, infrastructure capacity, fiscal impacts and public policy will result in pushing this growth and its economic pressure throughout the state.

Although the pressure this growth will impose on land resources, infrastructure, governmental services, and the day-to-day quality of life of Floridians is not without tremendous challenges, for rural counties like Taylor County, such pressures can help create long term economic opportunities. By implementing intelligent-growth principles, such as best land use practices and balanced environmental stewardship, Taylor County can create a quality of life that will differentiate the County from competing, less planned regions.

Capitalizing on intelligent growth alone, however, will not remedy the economic difficulties of job constrained and economically isolated rural communities, such as Taylor County. Governor Christ's re-designation of Taylor County as one of Florida's Rural Areas of Critical Economic Concern (RACEC) further frames the challenges facing Taylor County as it competes in today's ever changing economic landscape. According to the Governor's Executive Order, Taylor County is one of a handful of Florida counties "struggling to maintain, support or enhance job creating activity or to generate revenues for education and other critical government services such as infrastructure, transportation and safety." As the Executive Order further notes, these challenges threaten both the "well being and viability" of Taylor County. Although the RACEC designation qualifies the County for special assistance from the Governor's Office as well as other state and regional agencies and organizations, it leaves the principal task of creating an economically viable community to the citizens of Taylor County.

To embrace this task, the community engaged in the creation of a 50-year Vision for Taylor County. The preparation of the vision began in late April of 2007 and resulted in the adoption of the Taylor County Vision 2060 in September of 2008. Vision 2060 addressed not only the future development pattern that would best serve Taylor County but also addressed economic conditions in Taylor County and recommended the actions that should be considered to advance future economic development and revitalization. In conjunction with the economic analysis prepared for Vision 2060, the Taylor County Development Authority (TCDA) has prepared the Taylor County Economic Development Plan. The Taylor County Economic Development Plan provides the strategies and action plan that will allow the County to harness the pressures of Florida's dynamic growth while at the same time utilizing its available resources to support an integrated approach to economic growth which promotes regional economic health through a broader emphasis on community and human development. Taylor County Vision 2060 and the TCDA's Taylor County Economic Development Plan provide the foundation for and basis for formulating the Economic Development Element of the Taylor County Comprehensive Plan.

The economic development model embraced by Taylor County looks beyond city and county borders to the larger regional economy. ~~Instead of targeting individual firms,~~ This model promotes industry clusters, concentrations of interconnected businesses that can be engines for global competitiveness. It creates an environment where all businesses have the chance to succeed. The approach to economic development for Taylor County embraces the following components:

- An integrated approach where government, business, education and the community work together;
- Regional collaboration;
- Promoting Industry Clusters;
- Local focus to retain and expand business;
- Intelligent growth policies;
- Compact development;
- Environmental Responsibility;
- Human investment and Workforce Talent; and
- Poverty reduction and corporate responsibility.

The Taylor County Board of County Commissioners recognizes that incorporation of this optional Economic Development Element into the Taylor County Comprehensive Plan represents a critical link between comprehensive planning for a community and inducing successful economic development and revitalization. Having a distinctive and competitive identity will help Taylor County protect, sustain, and enhance a quality of life that is attractive for existing and future businesses and, residents and private investment.
